

LEAD
Minor

LEAD 300 Leadership for Racial Justice

3 credits

Catalog Course Description: Students will explore how various forms of leadership have been manifest in historic and current movements for racial justice. Emphasis is placed on leadership strategies as contextualized in time, space, and place of racial justice movements.

Syllabus Course Description: This course is designed to allow students to investigate leadership styles and forms through an exploration of leadership in historic and current racial justice movements. Racial justice, equity, and equality movements are bound by time, space, and place so various leadership strategies are employed by those fighting for and against such movements. By exploring the leadership styles and strategies employed by those on both sides, students will gain a better understanding of how dynamic leadership theory is, especially around topics of race. Students will, not only, utilize leadership theory to learn in the course, but also history as understood by the media, propaganda, and cultural anthropology.

Learning Outcomes:

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Articulate various styles of leadership as connected to different movements for racial justice
2. Analyze different historic and current movements for racial justice
3. Identify leaders on various sides of racial justice movements and the traits associated with their leadership
4. Synthesize common traits of leaders associated with racial justice movements
5. Differentiate between various theories of leadership that are useful to racial / social justice movements

Prerequisites: N/A